Dear Hiring Manager:

I am writing in response to your advertisement posted on Indeed.com regarding the Junior Software Engineer position. Please consider reviewing my attached resume for this opening.

I am going to graduate from Stony Brook University this December with a Bachelor of Science in computer science and psychology. Throughout my time at Stony Brook University, I have worked on a variety of projects ranging from design and front-end development to back-end development. I was involved in multiple team projects which required the use of documentation and repositories to have a clean and productive work flow. I am currently enrolled in a software engineering class to further develop my communication, database, and interface design skills as well as a computer vision course to improve my familiarity with Python.

I currently work for a nonprofit organization called kidOYO where my communication and coding skills are tested through the act of teaching. Students and teachers enroll in our classes where I teach fundamental coding methods using Python and HTML. Learning how to communicate to different audiences has been insightful and I would be able to apply this experience working at Warby Parker.

One project that I worked on for class was a basic form of Netflix. I worked with two other people and we were all new to databases at the time. We were all eager to learn how to use MySQL so we divided the work up evenly and maintained our code by making sure to commit each important task. My desire to continue working with others and learn new languages makes me a perfect candidate to be a Junior Software Engineer.

I look forward to exploring this opportunity with you. If you would like to discuss this further, I can be contacted through phone at (516) 426-8257 or by email at depasquale.marisa@gmail.com any time at your convenience.

Sincerely,

Marisa DePasquale
